SAVANNAH READY TO CONTINUE CLASSICS, OFFICIAL DECLARES

Vanderbilt Cup and Grand Prize Wanted, Secretary of Club Says.

DENIES RUMOR THAT CITY IS RELUCTANT

Experienced Managers and Splendid Course Open If Automobile Makers Want Them.

By HARRY WARD.

"If the automobile makers want the two great classics—the Vanderbilt Cup and the Grand Prize races-run at Sa vannah again this fall, our city stands ready to give them the chance." In these words Arthur Solomon, secre tary of the Savannah Automobile Club. taged the rumors that Savannah was through with automobile racing. That the magnificent course and the good offices of the experienced and efient race committee of the Savannah Automobile Club will be at the disposal of the trade and racing fraternity this fall will be interesting news to the racing fans.

The proposed big motordrome on the Jersey meadows a few miles from New York is practically an assured fact. A two-mile track is to be built, and it is expected to be ready for the first big race next October. The exact material to be used in the construction of the track has not yet been decided upon, but it is expected it will be either cement or word.

The Garford Motor Vehicle Company en formed to handle pleasure and commercial cars in this city. R. C. Smith is president and Charles T. Felter vice president. The company will have its salesrooms at 829 Fourteenth street, and within the next few days will establish a service department.

"It will be the aim of the company to give Garford owners in Washington the best service possible," said Presi-dent Smith.

More than ordinary interest attaches More than ordinary interest attaches to the fact that the Regal agency has been transferred to the Hudson Sales Company, 1012 Fourteenth street, of which C. M. Storm is manager. The new agency will handle both pleasure and commercial cars. The Regal makers are bringing out a new commercial delivery wagon and several models, together with a number of the 1912 Regal nleasure cars, will be on exhibition early pleasure cars, will be on exhibition early in the week. F. L. Pierce, sales manager of the Regal Motor Car Company, and B. B. Traub, eastern district manager of the Regal Company, were here during the week and selected the new agency.

A. C. Thour is the latest purchaser of a Marion "35" touring car. The sale was made yesterday by the Marion Motor Car Company.

Seven entries have been received for Seven entries have been received for the second annual 500-mile International Sweepstakes race next Memorial Day, on the Indianapolis speedway. The latest entrant is Spencer Wishart, the wealthy young sportsman, who drives return to her former grandeur.

One of the interesting features in connection with the forthcoming race is the interest foreign makers are taking in the event. Many requests for infor-mation about the race have been re-ceived from abroad and it is probable several new foreign cars and drivers will make their American debut in the classic event.

The entry list so far shows that four American cars have been entered er.
against three foreign machines. All of the foreign entries are privately owned machines. Ralph De Palma's mount bemachines. Ralph De Palma's mount being the property of a New York man; Joe Matson's entry is owned in Los Angeles, while Wisnart's car is his own property. This leads the racing enthusiasts in the country to believe that motor car racing is becoming more of a sporting proposition than ever before, and eventually it may become a competition entered only by cars owned privately without affiliation with factories or dealers.

The exclusive announcement in The Times yesterday that plans were under way for a "Gildden" tour for motor-cycles, excited much interest among Washington riders. It is expected this city will be represented by several entries. tries in the tour. "The proposed tour is the best sporting event for motor-cycles that has yet been devised," declared one of Washington's veteran riders, "and I hope to see a number of our most prominent 'speed merchants' in the line-up."

Motorists of this city are interested in the test case of a Washington mo-torist as to whether a motor car owned in the District of Columbia must have in the District of Columbia must have a Maryland license. The case will soon be argued by Attorney General Poe of Maryland before the United States Supreme Court. Should the court decide in favor of the Washingtonian it will probably affect the motor laws all over the country.

The present status of relations be-The present status of relations between the Manufacturers' Contest Association and the American Automobile Association which still has several months to run, will be materially changed. The story opens at the pretty home of
a. M. Roger Deverly, called the Villa des Roses. M. Roger Deverly is stabbed to death, and his wife, Adrienne, who has spent the evening away from her home, and refuses to tell where she was when her husband was killed, is suspected of the crime. Her servant, Josephine, whose sweetheart is "Bribri the Serpent," one of the most notorious Apaches in Paris, gives the information that Mme. Deveriy was away from home. While the detective, Pousse-Pousse, is seeking to unravel the crime, one Chauffard, a well-known usurer who lives near Neuilly, suddenly disappears from his home one evening, together with his niece, Georgetts. A shastly hand, which is identified as being Chauffard's, is found in the garden.
With the second murder, a young detective enters the field disguised as Narcisse.

Bribri and Josephine seek to get Narcisse to sell two fine pieces of jewelry. They are arrested by the detective.

A judicial inquiry is held at which Bribri and Josephine confess they stole the jewels from the Vilia des Roses. Mme. Deverly and Gisele Provins, her former governess, protest they have never seen the ornaments. It is found the jewelry has disappeared from the magistrate's desk.

Leon talks with his friend, Berge Jablow, a Russian. This man tells Leon the romantic story of his life.

Berge's house is searched and he is arrested as a refuge, Pousse Pousse finds a watch that had belonged to Chauffard's niece. He sees Leon, but the young man escapes.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Curiosities, Objects of Art, and Jewels. ISS MAUD GOLDWILD, allas Mathilde Roguet, the lady who kept the sumptuous tearooms where we first met Mme Bar-net-Dufour and Jose y Johannes, had had great misfortunes. A few weeks after the American had

A few weeks after the American had called upon her to ask if she could procure a counterpart to the Doorgha statue, the beautiful Maud had been sent away from her luxurious establishment, not with the flourish of trumpets and drums, but on a simple order of an ordinary sheriff.

Some tradesmen who had been ridiculously exacting had brought ruin on the pseudo English woman.

Jose y Johannes, who had once been a friend of the fair Maud, and to whom she had turned for help, had turned a deaf ear to her entreaties. Besides, he also had his troubles. His own affairs were not going exactly as he would

So Miss Maud Goldwild became Mathida Roguet again. She was established with the remains of her splendor that she had saved from the wreck in an apartment in the Rue Frochot, near the Place Pigalle.

Always desirous of giving pleasure to her acquaintences she had not together.

her acquaintances, she had got together for their benefit a most interesting col-lection of works of art of the eight-eenth century. That, at least, is what she affirmed in the alluring little adver-tisements that she inserted in the soci-tisements that she inserted in the society papers.

Fragonards, Watteaus, Bouchers, Lancrets she had in abundance, also some ravishing little pieces of Saxe.
And so as to give her visitors a more real and suggestive pleasure, she had added to her collection some exceptionally pretty young girls. In a word, following the subtle expression of a well-known pamphlet, Mathilde, in her quality of a second-hand dealer, sold was now the last days of November.

Mme. Reguet was seated on a comfortable lounge, giving herself up to an interesting occupation. Aided by her alter ego, Francoise, the house keeper, she going over the accounts.

"Everything has gone up, madame," said the housekeeper. "Soon one won't be able to make an honest living. The grocer told me that everything is dear-

"You go, Francoise," said Madame Roguet. "Nanine is not there." Nanine was the housemaid, Clemen-tine, but Clementine was too long for Mme. Roguet to say, so she called her

"Nanine."

The housekeeper went through the hall as quickly as her fat, short limbs would permit her. She soon returned.

"A lady to see you, madame," she said. "What is she like?"

"What is she like?"
"She is wearing a thick black veil, but she seems young and slim."
"Ask her into the salon."
The visitor had remained standing in the middle of the room. Through her thick veil two brilliant dark eyes flashed like iet.

"What do you desire, madame?" said Mathilde a little distrustfully. "I wish to speak to you upon busi-ness, madame." ness, madame."
"I am listening."

"No one can hear?" the said.

"My house is known for its discretion, but will you sit down, madame; we shall be able to talk better."

The velicd lady took the seat that Mme. Roguet offered her.

"Madame," she said in a low voice, "I have some things that I am obliged to sell. A mutual friend, M. Jose y Johannes, spoke to me of you, and said that if I came to you, you would be able to transact the business for me in a safe and discreet manner."

"M. Jose y Johannes was correct."

"Besides," said the velled lady, "if you buy these jewels—"

"They are jewels?" interrupted Mathilde. "They are precious stones which belonged to an ornament. Now, if we do business together, it will be to your interest also not to speak of the affair. I

Mathilde. "Will you show me the

There was an enormous ruby, a bea riful pearl, and several diamonds. Mathilde took up the tortoise-shell glass which hung from her belt and examined the stones carefully. "They are very fine," she said; "the pearl has been revived in the sea, the ruby is magnificent, and the diamonds—well, there are some very clear, but

"How much can you give me?"
"My dear ruadame," said Mathilde,

"Only 2,000 francs for these magnificent stones!"

"They are worth 25,000 in the Rue de la Paix, but in this transaction there are great risks. I am taking the risks—you will have 100 louis and be rid of them. Entre nous, madam, they must be rather in your way."

The velled woman made no reply to fur neck pieces for sale.

chair.

"Tomorrow at what hour?" she said.

Mme. Roquet thought for a moment,
then said:

"The same time tomorrow."

"Very well."

The woman walked toward the door,
then suddenly turned round.

"And how do I know there will not be a trap laid for me tomorrow?" she said.

"You should not have come if you hau no confidence in me. But see, I will reno confidence in me. But see, I will re-assure you; if you don't wish to come send Jose y Johannes. I will give him the money."
"Very well," said the stranger, "I will come."

As soon as she had gone Mathilde Roquet thought deeply.

Twenty-five thousand francs! Why, the stones were worth 60,000 if a soul This deal would be a godsend to her. It meant that she could begin her life of luxury again. She had connections with some sharpers in England, and it would be quite safe for her to deal with them. She knew that these obliging persons would willingly give her 10,000 francs for the stones. But she would have to pay her mysterious visitor first, because she would not let her have the stones until she had the money. And Mathilde had only three louis!

A resolution was adopted thanking As soon as she had gone Mathilde

She must get the money from somewhere. After having passed in review the circle of her acquaintances, she re-membered an old music hall friend who membered an old music hall friend who was now on the top rung of the ladder of success. She would help her.

She looked at the imitation marble clock on the mantie shelf. It was 6 o'clock. She dined at 7. If she took the Subway she would have time to call upon her friend, who lived in the Rue Francois. She pinned a fur toque on her braids of black hair and threw a cloak over her shoulders.

In a few minutes she arrived at the Alma, where she got out. She walked Alma, where she got out. She walked quickly to her friend's house, and ar-rived just at the moment when she was returning from the Bois in a superb au-

"Tres blen. Money affairs? If so, I can tell you, you have chosen badly, ma belle. I have just borrowed ten louis from my chaffeur—haven't I, Charlie?"
The chauffeur took off his cap respectfully, and said:

Mathilde looked astonished.
"Oh! yes, that's right," said the blond Odette. "You didn't know? Everybody said to me: 'You must be a countess;
you look just like one.' So I had a coat of arms painted on my panels. Ah! ah!

When the countess was in her boudoir her smart costume replaced by a negli-gee of flimy lace, she said: "Now I'm ready, ma belle. What is "I want 2,000 francs at once. It is for

"You are so sweet."
"Listen. Over there in the coffer there is a necklace which is worth 50,000 francs. You can pawn it and get 5,000 on it; keep two for yourself and give me the rest."

Mathilda looked thoughtfully.
"But." she said, "you know to get anything from the three balls I must have papers, and I haven't any."
"You can take mine and pawn it in my name." Odette, who beneath her flighty manner was a very practical young person, took some papers from them."

Mathilda was delighted; the formali-Mathilda was delighted; the formalities of pawning had worried her, but under these conditions she ran no risks. The chauffeur fetched his friends and Mathilde and the three men got into a flacre and drove off to an important monte de piete. The transaction being of such importance, it was thought advisable not to go to a small bureau. When Mathilde went into the hall where the goods are pledged, the place was crowded.

Believe Bill Will Pass.

The opinion that the Hamill bill will be passed if it is presented to Congress has been freely expressed by members of Congress who addressed the convention.

Congressmen O'Shaunessy of Rhode Island, Reilly of Connecticut, Ayres of New York, and Hamill, author of the bill, all pledged their efforts to get it out of the committee and presented to the House. Congressmen Godwin and Calder made similar promises at Fri-day's session of the convention.

"The civil service law is incomplete," declared Mr. O'Shaunessy, who was a clerk in the New York postoffice before his admission to the bar of that State "It invites men to a permanency in the service only to betray them in the end by an outrageous disregard of their faithful labors.

Increase in Use of Firearms for Suicide

Firearms as a mode of suicide are ncreasing in popularity, according to statistics published by the Census Bureau on the suicide rate of the country.

According to these figures the percentage of suicides was less for 1910 than it was for 1909, but despite this fact, the percentage of those who took their lives with firearms was greater in 1910 than in 1909.

There were fewer suicides in the District in 1910 than in the year previous, with a consequent lowering of the per-centage. Ninety-five residents took their lives in the District in 1909, and but 80 committed self-murder in 1910. California has the highest suicide rate among the States, and Maryland the lowest. San Francisco has the high-est rate for the cities. Urban resi-dents make up nearly all of the 8,590 persons who extinguished their lives.

PERSONAL KI-RO-PRACTIC is the KNOWLEDGE (not theory) of PHILOSOPHY of CAUSE of disease; the SCIENCE OF KNOWING HOW and the ART or ability to ADJUST it.

HEALTH is the RESTORATION of currents; not the stimulation or diminution of how little does exist. Stop taking drugs; how little does exist. Stop taking drugs; they are unnecessary. Avoid the knife; it is useless in % per cent of cases. If sick, no matter what or where your all-ment (mild or severe), investigate. We can prove that Ki-ro-prac-tic is RIGHT and apthat Ki-ro-practic is le to your case. resultation and spinal analysis free.
